

Philippe MADEC

What about Prague ?

Mr SVEC :

What do you think of Prague in term of architecture ?

Philippe MADEC :

I spent too few time in Prague to be able to have a smart understanding of the city. During a two hours walk in the center, I saw the indecent and radical collage of styles and periods, a coherent joy maybe, a great capacity of course to put all together, and through centuries, forms, colors, materials... and a remarkable aptitude to create triangular public places, not so usual.

Mr SVEC :

What should the city do in order to become a modern capital ?

Philippe MADEC :

Really, I hope that you will skip the modern period, and that the city will go directly to sustainability. It means : a city compassionately involved in the everyday life of its citizens, in their future as well as in the future of our common planet, interested in equity and ecology, cultural diversity and biodiversity, at the same time social and economical aims.
